

The FCC regulates "smut" and "sex" on TV, but anything goes when it comes to violence. TV news is awash in violence continuously. These things are detrimental to our society and need to be regulated as rigorously, if not more so, as "smut" and "sex". The Super Bowl incident with Janet Jackson's wardrobe "malfunction" created an outcry because of the baring of her breast, but shouldn't the fact that it was done in the context of a violent attack illicit an equal outcry? Violence against women and children in our society is rampant and the glorifying of that violence needs to end.
